7 POPULISM ERODES THAILAND'S OLD ORDER

Colum Murphy, deputy editor of the REVIEW, says growing populism could erase the power of the elite, ushering in an era of profound change for Thai society and people, and bringing the risk of damage to the economy.

30 RESPONDING TO KIM'S LATEST PROVOCATION

Charles Armstrong, a professor at Columbia University, and Donald Kirk, a free-lance writer, examine how past policies will shape the U.S. and South Korean reactions to Pyongyang's May 25 nuclear test.

13 TRUTH A CASUALTY IN SRI LANKA'S WAR

Simon Montlake and Angilee Shah, free-lance journalists based in Bangkok and Los Angeles, respectively, describe how the government's harsh suppression of information helped Colombo win the propaganda war.

37 WILL 'RED MONEY' TAME TAIWAN?

Jonathan Adams, a free-lance journalist based in Taipei, argues that despite lack of transparency and opposition complaints, the Ma administration's opening to Chinese investment still contains significant safeguards.

21 NEPAL'S DEMOCRACY HONEYMOON ENDS

Nicholas Owen, a free-lance writer formerly based in Kathmandu, foresees trouble ahead as the ruling coalition begins to fracture under the stress of Maoist power plays and deepening societal divisions.

41 CHINA'S RAIL PLANS: AWESOME OR AWFUL?

Kathleen McLaughlin, a free-lance journalist based in Beijing, looks at whether Beijing's efforts to breathe life into its flagging economy by investing in transport infrastructure really benefits local communities.

25 RAISING THE STAKES IN BURMA

Ian Holliday, dean of social sciences at Hong Kong University, analyzes how the reaction to the trial of Aung San Suu Kyi could catalyze changes to the international community's approach toward the Burmese junta.

45 HIGH HOPES FOR THE NEXT SBY TERM

James Van Zorge, partner in a Jakarta consulting firm, predicts Indonesian President Yudhoyono will continue sound macroeconomic policies, but the business community is pushing for a new round of reforms.

CONTENTS

49 MANY THINGS ROTTEN IN THE STATE OF INDIA

Subhash Agrawal, the founder of India Focus, and Salil Tripathi, a free-lance writer, say the Congress must get ready to work; the road to effective governance is a difficult one.

56 THE CURSE OF OIL LOOMS FOR CAMBODIA

Geoffrey Cain, a free-lance writer, calls on Western donors to take pre-emptive action as the Cambodian government plans to keep oil revenues in the hands of officials.

REVIEWS:

JAUNT THROUGH ASIA:

Ron Gluckman, a free-lance writer based in Bangkok and Phnom Penh, discusses the detrimental impact of dredging on a dwindling population of seahorses living along Cambodia's near-pristine coastline. PAGE 77

REGULATION

94

Government in Your Business

Robert B. Reich

Expect more government intervention than we've seen in decades – but in the form of incentives rather than heavy-handed regulations.

The Moral Hazard Economy

Peter L. Bernstein

How disastrous the consequences of recent government intervention will be depends on whether our appetite for risk has been increased by the bailouts or reduced by the meltdown.

Security Alert

George K. Campbell and Richard A. Lefler

Make sure you put your money where the threats are.

CUSTOMERS

Understanding the Postrecession Consumer

Paul Flatters and Michael Willmott

Discover how the current recession will affect consumer behavior – during the downturn, through the recovery, and over the long term.

Selling to the Debt-Averse Consumer

Eric Janszen

To woo today's shoppers, companies need to offer value, and craft marketing messages that focus on getting back to basics.

Restoring American Competitiveness

Gary P. Pisano and Willy C. Shih

To rebuild its economy, the U.S. must rebuild its high-tech manufacturing base.

The Threat of Global Gridlock

The world's ports, highways, railroads, and airways are running out of room. Firms need to act now to get ahead of the coming transportation crisis.

The New Frontiers

Anand P. Raman

The downturn is reshaping emerging markets in a way that may create much more formidable competitors.

WHERE WILL THE MARKET GO?

As optimism powers the market to a rally despite the poor economic numbers, the question on everyone's mind is, how sustainable is it? The issue is all the more significant as the run-up – more than 20% for the year – sees little contribution from foreign inflows. It suggests that local funds and investors have been the main catalyst, causing the benchmark index to trade at an overstretched PE, according to some analysts. Are the positive sentiment and expectations justified?
